

Biography

Gina Cabrejo is a Colombian attorney who specialized in diverse areas of law, including finance, banking, criminal prosecution, and administration. Cabrejo has held national positions applying the law and fighting corruption. She trained other Colombian prosecutors during the country's transition to its oral accusatory legal system on "Principio de Oportunidad," a type of negotiation settlement. As an attorney with the Office of the Attorney General in Colombia, Cabrejo prosecuted complex corruption, tax evasion, and fraud cases. She possesses a master's degree in International Law, LL.M. from Stetson University in Saint Petersburg, Florida, which complements her first degree in law. Cabrejo currently works as Criminal Justice Instructor for Latin American Program with the National Association of Attorneys General (NAAG)'s training and research institute, the National Attorneys General Training and Research Institute (NAGTRI). Given her expertise in inquisitorial and adversarial legal systems, she helps to facilitate trainings, increase communication, and develop domestic and international relationships for NAGTRI's Center for International Partnerships and Strategic Collaboration (CIPS-C).
