Israeli and Brazilian Cooperation in the Fight against Organized Crime

Synopsis:

The director of the International department at the Israeli state attorney's office along with the former head of international cooperation at the Brazilian prosecutor general's office, will introduce the members of the plenary to the major progress the two countries have made in the field of judicial cooperation. This progress will be presented through the story of a major case, code-named "case 512". The case deals with criminal activities associated with one of the biggest, transnational spread criminal organizations Israel has ever known.

The presenters will walk the members of the plenary through the international processes, which ultimately enabled Israel to crack down some of its most formidable criminal organizations.

The presenters will share the challenges brought by the cross-system cooperation, particularly those stemming from natural differences between respective legal systems, and will describe how they were overcome.
